Vector Pests - More Than Just Annoying

Mosquitoes

- It is believed that since the beginning of time mosquitoes are responsible for one half of all human deaths.
- Even today, Malaria infects about 250 million people annually and kills about one million.
- Females lay up to 300 eggs and lay eggs three times during their life. The mosquito life span is usually less than 2 months.
- Most mosquitoes cannot fly very far (1-3 miles) nor very fast (1-1.5 mph). Most mosquitos spend their entire life within a few hundred yards of their hatch site.

Fleas

- Fleas transmit a variety of diseases including tapeworms.
- Fleas can jump about 50 times their body length.
- Generally most fleas only live two or three months but are capable of producing a few thousand eggs during this time.
- Flea infected rodents are responsible for the Bubonic Plague which has killed tens of millions of people throughout different times in history.
- In 2003, there were over 2100 infections resulting in 180 deaths and another 50 people died from the plague in 2006.

Ticks

- Ticks carry multiple diseases including lyme disease and rocky mountain spotted fever. In the last few years deaths from tick bites have become much more common.
- There are hundreds of species of ticks. The prevalent ones in this area are the: Lone Star, American Dog, and Black-Legged.
- Ticks feed on mammals, birds and reptiles.
- During feeding the female tick is fertilized by a male, upon completion of feeding the female tick will drop off of the host. About a week later she lays around 6000 eggs.
